Over more than five decades Gary Westerhoff has developed a passion for outdoor adventures. That passion combines his love of fly fishing for trout and salmon with landscape and nature photography across North, Central and South America.

Gary is a professional environmental engineer, specializing in drinking water supply and treatment. He lives in Chester, New Jersey, and travels extensively. Many of his award-winning photographs have been exhibited and included in numerous publications

Gary has published over a dozen books containing photographs and stories of his adventure and American wildlife. The covers of two recent books are shown below. All his books may be previewed from the bookstore at Blurb.com.

You're driving along a back road and a bushy-tailed fox dashes across the road in front of you. Early on a spring morning you see a young fawn nibbling on some fresh buds in your garden. Sometimes you catch sight of a moose, elk or bear in the distance, or see a hawk or eagle circling high overhead. Most of us have had these experiences. Sometimes we try to take a photo, but the animal is too far away for much detail. We often must be satisfied with a brief glimpse of wildlife.

In a narrated slide presentation, photographer Gary Westerhoff shows photographs of a variety of American wildlife. These images include raccoons, lynx, wolves, mountain lions, coyotes, fox, deer, moose, birds of prey and black and grizzly bears. Gary's patience in waiting for just the right moment, enhanced by his professional equipment, bring the animals up close and personal. Through these images you can observe how the animals relate to their family members and their environment. If you look closely, their many unique expressions can also tell you stories of their individual personalities.

Gary has presented narrated slide shows of native critters and wildlife at meetings of not-for-profit organizations including Trout Unlimited, Rotary, social clubs and art associations, and also to accompany his photography exhibits. If you are interested in a 20-30 minute presentation, please email him directly.
